

Is LASIK right for you?

With over half of the US population requiring vision correction, there are 40 million people in the United States who wear contact lenses. Each year one in six contact lens wearers drops out of contact lenses due to the top reasons of discomfort, poor vision, expense and inconvenience.¹ Since LASIK was approved by the FDA in 1995 more than 16 million procedures have been performed in the US alone. Fortunately, with recent advances in Laser Eye Surgery, the majority of patients needing vision correction can now take advantage of LASIK. Whether you are nearsighted, farsighted, have astigmatism, or need bifocals there is a Laser Vision Correction procedure for you.

The Most Popular Elective Surgery

LASIK is one of the most popular elective procedures and refractive surgeons now have almost 20 years of clinical experience with the technology. The success rate speaks for itself. According to an FDA clinical study, 98% of patients have equal to or better vision after undergoing a Custom LASIK procedure, than they had with corrective lenses.

The QualSight program is not an insured benefit and is available to members for access to QualSight for LASIK surgery.
